For the eleventh-fifth time it is necessary to remind those people who want their names in the papers that Uncle Sam does not deliver letters for fun. If you want your letter to reach the Editor, put a 3 cent postage stamp on it.

The best street cleaning in the city is at Front and Market. It is made of street-paving brick, has been down several years, has never cost a nickel for repairs, and is good as new. The objection to brick streets is that they don't cost much for repairs, and are therefore cheap in the long run. What our people want is streets that have to be built over every year, and an annual outlay of from $7,000 to $12,000. It's the "good old way," and must be kept up.

JOSEPH RYAN ACQUITTED.

His Case Heard in the Circuit Court at Vanceburg Yesterday.

Mr. Joseph Ryan, formerly of this city, was tried at Vanceburg yesterday for the killing of Jerry Shaw at Valley on the 7th of November last.

A clear case of self defense was proven and Mr. Ryan was promptly acquitted.

Six weeks from today Congress will expire and with it the Cleveland Administration.

At the First Presbyterian Church tonight there will be a Union Social of all seniors of the Christian Endeavor Societies.

As the days lengthen one has longer to work. However, there's some compensation in the fact that the gulls are shrinking—like a flannel jacket that's washed in warm water.

The Grand Jury at Frankfort has returned two indictments against the Louisville Water Company for failing to make reports to the State Auditor, as required by the corporation laws. The penalty in each case is a fine of $1,000.

Judging from the audience at the Opera house on the night of May Davenport's appearance, an Anti-high Hat Ordinance is not necessary in Maysville. Most of those on the front rows didn't even have hair on their heads.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL.

Combs, Tarleton and Blanford Are Entitled For the Kentucky Plan.

Hon. Leslie Combs of Lexington, one of the original "original McKinley men," is in Frankfort a day or so ago calling on the state officials.

He wants to be United States Marshal for Kentucky under the new Administration.

Mr. Combs says he has been doing very little "hosting" for the place, and doesn't know anything about the movements of his opponents. Colonel L. P. Tarleton of Frankfort and Mr. Speaker Blanford of Breckinridge.

SIXTH WARD NOTES.

What a Ledger Scribe Heard and Saw There.

Mr. Reuben Hunt is no better.

Brack Carr's somewhat better.

Mr. J. F. Lee is slowly improving.

There is to be a meat store started here soon.

Pat McCarthy is building an addition to his home.

Superintendent James Limerick is somewhat better.

George Wallingford has sold his residence to Mr. H. H. Collins.

Master Harold Jones is convalescing after a severe spell of typhoid fever.

The Shoe Factory is now humming day and part of the night with a full force at work.

Dawson Bros. have dug a well on the lots lately bought of C. D. Pearce, to move them of the surface water; a good move.

Mr. David Hechinger is having twenty lots fenced in, to be gardened by Uncle Ben Thomas. The ground will be plowed for the first time in over thirty years.

Uncle Bill asks how many barrooms does it take to get a policeman up here? He says one should give us one of those common ones and two ought to give us one of those big fellows.

The Sixth Ward Debating Club will on Saturday evening discuss "Which of Two Evils is the Greatest, War or Intemperance?" This Club should be encouraged as the majority of the members are young men, and it is gratifying to their parents to know they are taking this step. The barroom is no more sought after by them.

The Sixth Ward Schoolhouse is going to pieces. The spouting is smashed, the cistern water is being ruined by the filthy water off the porch running into it, the ventilator in the gable is broken out and bricks thrown in on the ceiling by the hundreds, no fence at all, and the foundation partly torn out, leaving some of the joist loose. Somebody is responsible for this new house being torn to pieces.

Miss Bettie Shanklin is quite well off, owing the farm on which she lives, besides having financial investments.

She managed, however, to drag herself to the house, where she crawled into a chair, and sat throughout the entire night and until 10 o'clock the next morning.

Then a neighbor came along and discovering the situation the necessary assistance was rendered.

MASON'S MOUND BUILDER.

Has His Ancient Grave Restored in Central Park Museum.

THE DETAILS CAREFULLY PRESERVED.

Mason county has furnished a most interesting contribution to archaeological study—the only specimen of the sort in the world.

The American Museum of Natural History in Central Park, New York City, has just completed and opened for public inspection an absolutely unique exhibit, which is of great archaeological interest and value. It shows the skeleton of an ancient Mound Builder lying in his grave, just as found in a Mason county mound a little over a year ago.

Heretofore it has remained to the explorer alone to see the remains of these strange people with a most uncertain history, as they lay beneath the mounds from which they take their name; but now not only the scientist and the student but the simply curious can witness their mode of interment.

From a scientific point of view this exhibit is of peculiar interest, for not only is it the only one of the sort in the world, but the information conveyed by it is full to the utmost detail and given through the careful preservation and reproduction by photograph of each step taken, as the peculiar work of the prehistoric people was disclosed.

When, in 1885, the Central Park Museum expedition, under the charge of Professor Harlan I. Smith, was working in this county the exhibit now made was first suggested.

Through the daily press and scientific publications the people had presented to them all of the current information in relation to the Mound Builders, so far as it had been discovered through broad explorations through the Mississippi Valley, but no scientific institution had attempted to exhibit a veritable grave within the walls of a museum.

In these peculiar structures were to be found the skeletons of the almost unknown people who had marked their ancient tents by heaps of earth besides pottery, stone, flint, beads, axes and other ornaments and tools preserved through the centuries; but the mound itself had to be known only from a written description.

When it was finally decided to reproduce a veritable grave of a Mound Builder a mound for the purpose was selected on the Fox farm near Maysville, a short distance South of Maysville. The mound was first photographed, and each step in the excavation was carefully noted and pictured with the utmost scientific accuracy.

As the work proceeded until about one-half of the mound had been removed nearly down to the ground level, five stone slabs, laid in a line, with edges touching, and covering a space about two feet by six in size, were found. Work was then suspended, and a photograph taken of the mound as it then was, showing the five stone slabs. Then they were carefully removed, and the skeleton of an adult male was seen. Another photograph was then taken, and the position of every bone was carefully noted.

The dead Mound Builder had been laid on his back, with his feet drawn up to ward his body, which raised his knees. His mouth was wide open, his left hand was on the right side of his chest and the other hand lay at his right side.

The bones and stones were carefully boxed and shipped to New York.

All of this is now exhibited in the hall on the top floor of the Museum in Central Park. The grave as it was when the remains of the body were laid bare is shown exactly, and each bone is laid in place precisely as when found.

With the exhibit are two photographs, one showing the appearance before the five stone slabs that covered the body were removed, and the other giving the picture after the bones were laid bare.

The Mound Builder, who lay hidden from the eyes of many successive generations that have for hundreds of years claimed his heritage, is now—in the name of science—on exhibition to be gazed at by millions who have succeeded him.

PERSONAL JOURNALISM.

Strong Language Gets a Tennessee Editor in Trouble With Uncle Sam.

"Talk is cheap" is a saw that's old enough to vote. And it may do sometimes.

But it doesn't always go with Uncle Sam.

A few days ago at Nashville Postoffice Inspector Whitesides swore out a warrant in the Federal Court for the arrest of Charles H. Briest, Editor of The Daily Courier of Bristol, Tenn., on the charge of sending obscene matter through the mails.

Strong recently published some editorials over his signature. In which very coarse language was used.

Mr. Slack is well known in this city, having married a Maysville lady—Mrs. Lizzie Wheeler.

COTTAGEVILLE COLLINGS.

Notions from Our Faithful Newspaper in That Faithful Field.

Colds are epidemic here. A good many from this place attended the funeral of H. C. Barkley.

Humphrey Marshall, the enterprising merchant, was in Vaneburg Tuesday.

Arthur Tolle and his mother, Mrs. J. W. Tully, visited in Mason county the first of the week.

Mr. and Mrs. Elijah Luman of Tollerboro visited Mrs. Luman's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Rignee.

Mrs. John McNutt, Sr., who has been seriously ill with pneumonia for some weeks, is thought to be improving slowly.

J. W. Tully was in Manchester the first of the week. His little granddaughter, Miss Marie, is quite seriously ill with pneumonia.

The many friends of Charles Gray at this place were grieved to hear of his death at his home in Tollerboro. We tender our sincere sympathies to the stricken family.

This community was shocked as well as pained to hear of the death of the genial and whole-souled Mr. H. C. Barkley. It was here a few days before looking unusually well. His kind words and happy smile he shared with all he met while long in the hearts of his many old friends at this place. We extend to his bereaved family our sincere sympathy.

KENNEDY'S CREEK COLLINGS.

Doings in That Romantic Region of Mason County's Picturesque Domain.

George McLaughlin, Sr., is confined to his room with a leg.

Born to the wife of John Cobb, Jr., January 19th, a daughter.

Moses Bradford of Aberdeen visited his sister, Mrs. Dora Bradford, Tuesday.

Miss Annie Belle Ring is visiting Henry Adams near Georgetown, O., this week.

George Hutton of Flemingburg visited the family of Robert Bradford the last of the week.

Mr. Amelia Cobb and daughter, Mrs. Carrie Bromley of Covington, were pleasant visitors at Uncle Dan Yazzell's last week.

E. G. Halfhill delivered his crop of tobacco to Mayville merchants Tuesday. While the price was low, it brought a handsome sum, as Mr. H. had one of the largest crops in the neighborhood.

Hawkie W. Correll of the Orangeburg neighborhood was here last week canvassing for his book, "The Life of W. J. Bryan." While he might have highly honored his party, did he not get them with a fifteen-minute speech at Mayville? Many came a score of miles through a soaking rain, but they were disappointed, and no free silver policy of his was buried so deep that it will never resurrect again.

"Save the rod and spare the child" did not work very well in this case in the District School one day last week. It was that of a refractory pupil who would not obey a command, but showed fight, and whose herculean strength was almost equal to that of the teacher, William Hicks. While a perfect pandemonium existed for a while, the teacher was equal to the emergency, and we are sorry to say that the pupil was expelled for a time, but hope that the lesson he learned that day may be beneficial to him the balance of his school days.

Girls, while the leap year 1896 has so soon passed away, and that cruel calendar says it will be eight long years before another one comes around, we know you have lost many golden opportunities which you now regret, but you should not be discouraged, when we know a certain widow on the shady side of 60 who is receiving attention from a gentleman who will not fall below that line in years. Now, Aunt Ann, we do not care so much for his coming, but think when he takes you to Church he might find you a place inside the sacred walls.
